About EHTG

EHTG is the long-standing association where geneticists, surgeons, gastroenterologists, oncologists, and specialists from various disciplines across Europe collaborate for the well-being of patients with hereditary tumor diseases.

With a track record of successful collaborative studies, publishing guidelines, and creating databases, EHTG aims to enhance understanding and improve the treatment of hereditary tumor syndromes.

It serves as a unique platform where expert basic scientists and clinicians work together to achieve these goals.

Our Event

We are pleased to extend an exciting opportunity for you to sponsor the 8th annual EHTG meeting which will be held online on September 27th and 28th, 2024.

Our dynamic program includes engaging discussions on selected hot and controversial topics, debates, and a workshop day with in-depth scientific conversations. Distinguished speakers from around the world will participate in the program.

Educational Grants

A very important goal of the EHTG is education. We cordially invite our esteemed sponsors to contribute to the growth and impact of the EHTG through an educational grant.

By providing financial support, sponsors will enable the society to thrive and expand its offerings, which include engaging webinars, intellectually stimulating academic and educational events, travel funding for training Y-EHTG in renown institutes, hands-on workshops, and the development of easily accessible educational materials tailored to the needs of laypersons and self-support groups. Furthermore, the grant will facilitate the translation of these valuable resources into various languages, ensuring that crucial information reaches a diverse and global audience. Your contribution to the EHTG's mission will not only empower individuals affected by hereditary tumours but also foster a collaborative and inclusive environment that transcends borders, ultimately propelling advancements in the field of hereditary tumour prevention and management.
